She is a licensed social worker, having received her Master's of Social Work - Mental Health Concentration from the University of Cincinnati and her Undergraduate degree in Sociology from Wright State University.

She is a survivor of varied childhood traumas, and her life experiences have shaped her ministry and her calling. She is a shepherd, teacher, and evangelist - passionate about people. With a special heart for children growing up without parents due to incarceration, addiction, or death. She views herself as a change agent - led by Holy Spirit- to change the composition of the negativity existing in an individual's life. She uses positive psychology to help them change their self-perception, emphasizing their strengths (rather than their weaknesses); utilizing these strengths to bring life-impacting change.
